I the exact size of the airfield is not known. Its runway, however, which is constructed of red-colored gravel, is about 800 meters long and 300 meters wide. As of April 1953 about 50 single-engine, propellor-driven planes were stationed at the field. Two or three of the planes were doubledeckers. The airfield is used only in the summer. It is believed that it belongs administratively to the Errottau Airfield. The airfield area is not fenced in, but there are along its perimeter seven guard towers and numerous "No Trespassing" signs. Officers stationed at the field live in several family-type houses. Enlisted men at the field are quartered in seven or eight single-story barracks. In early April 1953 practice parachute jumps at the field were observed. 25X1 1/ Comment. See Attachment I, sketch of the field. 25X1
